

were still in high school. The mother sold cloaks. The girls were restless with their mother laboring for them. A theatrical advertisement, asking chorus girls, attracted them.

There was a long family conference and the girls visited the theater. The mother went with them. She has been with them since. In musical comedy the three traveled all over the country.

A vaudeville manager saw the girls and advised them to enter the variety game. They arranged an act, a simple enough one—neither of the girls ever took a singing or dancing lesson—and went around to the agents. It was hard work.

One day, however, a "temperamental" actress quit her place on the bill at the Majestic theater in Chicago.

The agent sent for the Farber girls and caught them in a photographer's studio being "took" in their stage clothes. It was a hurry-up taxicab trip to the theater and a breathless entrance. After it was through—

Well, the critics still talk about "the Farber girls."

What Prospects!

"I am going to ask your father for your hand."

"Oh, that will be lovely."

"You are glad?"

"Delighted! I will call and bring you flowers every day until you are able to be out again. I have never seen the inside of a hospital."
